Holmstrom is right about the boy's "fascinating period coiffure". Opinions may differ on the "healthy tang of early feminism"...

The Moving Picture Boy entry:

"Per Lindberg's "NORRTULLSLIGAN" is a refreshingly unusual silent movie about four young women who share an apartment, and their working lives in Stockholm offices: it combines warmth and wit with a healthy tang of early feminism. The only male who comes well out of it is the central girl's kid brother. (She works to keep him at boarding school.) Young Lauritz is a delight, with an amused, expressive face and a wicked upward slant to the eyebrows. He also sports a fascinating period coiffure.

Falk built himself a fine acting career and was in some 40 Swedish films between 1936 and 1972, including Christian-Jaque's "SINGOALLA" (Sweden/France 49) and Mai Zetterling's "NATTLEK" (66). He also directed, in 1944, two films of his own: "LEV FARLIGT" and "VÄNDKORSET". Between 1953 and 1955 he made several appearances in the American TV series "Foreign Intrigue"."
