Above and below: in a segment of the misfired portmanteau film "IT'S A BIG COUNTRY", Bobby played Joseph Esposito, whose Italian father held the view that wearing reading glasses was "unmanly". Joseph needed glasses.

The Moving Picture Boy entry:

|

“Bobby made his screen debut, modestly, at ten months. When he was seven, he contracted polio, and the forecast for his future was grim. However, he made a total recovery and resumed work without the slightest ill effects. His lively eyes and soft, good-natured profile made him a welcome ingredient of many movies of his time. He was particularly engaging in the "Four Eyes" episode of "IT'S A BIG COUNTRY", and was spunky enough to play Gavroche in the 1952 version of "LES MISÉRABLES". In his later teens he made one more appearance, in "THE CARELESS YEARS" (57).”

"IT'S A BIG COUNTRY" – Papa sees (with difficulty) the error of his ways.
