Leggy hero – Tugomir outfoxes the nazis in “DOLINA MIRU”

The Moving Picture Boy entry:

““Though he looks considerably older, the leggy hero of "DOLINA MIRU" - and son of its director, France Štiglic - was only nine when it was filmed. Tugo played a Slovenian boy, in the closing phase of World War Two, who befriends a little girl of German parentage (Evelyne Wohlfeiler) and later, a shot-down American pilot (John Kitzmiller).

This mini-League of Nations tries its best to survive, and two of the three do. Tugo Štiglic - who got the part on merit, surviving auditions in competition with others, despite being the director's son - was an athletic boy with a finely intent brown-eyed face, and it's sad that no more parts came his way. However, he went on to graduate in the History of Fine Arts at Ljubljana University; then, returning to films, worked as assistant to several Slovenian directors.

In the mid-Seventies he began directing short films of his own, and also directed for TV. His first feature was a children's film called "LETO U ŠKOLJCI" (Summer in a Seashell), made in 1985. Its success made a sequel possible.”
