“

The Moving Picture Boy entry:

“In "THE OTHER", a curious, effective horror melodrama scripted by Tom Tryon from his own novel, the Udvarnoky twins play twins Niles and Holland – the complication being that Holland is really dead, and only kept alive in Niles' fantasy as a playmate and convenient scapegoat for his own wicked and more vindictive acts, which don't stop short of murder.

The Udvarnokies, a pair of pudgy blonds, are fine in their secret games – all, it turns out, fermenting in the warped mind of Niles. Robert Mulligan, directing with bravura, plays his own game of double-bluff on the audience. By never showing the twins incontrovertibly together in full shot until the closing moments of the film, he encourages our belief that the "double act" is the usual fake: the final shot, when one sees that the twins really are separate boys, is worth waiting for.”
