Indeterminate website review:

"Eight year old Vinu is an artistically inclined boy who is irresistibly drawn to Nature. His parents however pin him to a rigid routine. Vinu finds that he is a prisoner of time in terms of his daily regime. He finds solace in thinking about his village and his loving grandfather. One day Vinu decides to run away to his village. In the course of his journey he meets and interacts with many people and faces adventures and encounters that are unusual. He finally reaches his destination.

Sivan began his illustrious career as a photo-journalist, contributing to magazines such as "Newsweek", "Life" and "Span". He learnt the rudiments of film making as a staffer with the USIS. He is credited with making the first 16mm film in India. "LABOUR WEEK" in 1953. From 1972 onwards, Sivan has made a spate of films that have won him awards and recognition. Sivan founded the film complex Sivan Studios in Kerala, which has extended to an art gallery for emerging artists and photographers. "SWAPNAM", made in 1972 was his first feature film, which won four state awards, and his second feature "YOGUM" was as successful. Sivan is currently engaged in the production of a major feature film as well as two documentaries."
