CVMC video retail/rental website review:

"A band of boys attempts to revenge the destruction of their school and the death of their friends.

Language: Spanish (with English subtitles)."

Don't you point that thing at me, my lad! I'll paddle your hacienda!

No further information currently available. "In 1913, the legend was Born" announces the video packaging. "In 1990, it was Horribly Mutilated beyond recognition", viewers may care to reply. Or not, as the case may be. Contemporary film-makers are rarely to be entrusted with the past, obeying some deep compulsion to transmute every age of human history to the fleeting political sensibilities of their own day. This auto-censorship process has always taken place, of course, but has become more shrill and propagandist in the last decade or two. I have not seen this film, and know nothing of the historical event it alludes to, but these are the misgivings with which I, for one, would approach all such material today. Nothing else is known of Damián Alcázar.
