Improbable hero - streetcar conductor Johnny Hines saves the day
Source: Warner Bros Story

The Warner Bros Story caption to still above:

"Smiling Johnny Hines (right), as an Irishman at large in the New World, became "CONDUCTOR 1492" when he took a job on a streetcar. He saves the life of the boss's child, is financially rewarded for his bravery, and wins the hand of his employer's pretty daughter. Written by its star as a vehicle for himself, it made the most out of its numerous comic situations with absolutely hilarious results. Doris May co-starred and the film also featured Dan Mason and Dorothy Burns with Byron Sage (left) as the child. Charles Hines and Frank Griffin directed."

No further information currently available. Byron Sage was omitted from The Moving Picture Boy. He appeared again for Warner six years later in "COURAGE", with Leon Janney and Don Marion. Judging from his age in that film, he must be about 10 here. Nothing else is known of him.
