“A small community in the Himalayas has harvested insufficient grain to last the winter. To supplement it they exchange salt for grain with a nearby settlement. But that requires a dangerous trek through the mountains. After the leader of such an expedition has perished, his 9-year old son Tserin is looked to as the successor. But Tserin, who to that end acquires from the gods the heroic name of Pasan, is too young in reality to become the leader, and a struggle develops between Pasan’s grandpa and a heroic opponent for the leadership of the subsequent expedition. Nothing much else really happens in the film, but it does give you an insight into daily life at the roof of the world. The beautiful natural backgrounds are very impressive.”
