Robert Fuller, Bobby Crawford and Hoagy Carmichael Source: How Sweet it Was

Halliwell's Television Companion review:

"Two friends own a trading station in Wyoming after the Civil War. Passers-by each week meant a long guest list and a wide range of stories. A good family Western series. 64 episodes black & white, 60 in colour. * "

How Sweet It Was note:

"The cast included Robert Fuller as Jess Harper, Bobby Crawford Jr as Andy Sherman, and Hoagy Carmichael as Jonesy - plus John Smith as Slim Sherman."

Note on Hoagy Carmichael:

"The songwriter-singer was star and host of the ninety-minute "Saturday Night Revue" in 1953. He turned up later in a Western, "Laramie".

The Moving Picture Boy entry on Dennis Holmes:

"Dennis - who made his film debut at the age of six weeks - should not be confused with the adult British actor Denis Holmes, who was active at the same time... Although determined little blond Dennis made a solid fistful of cinema films, he was best known for his resident role as Mike in the TV series "Laramie" (1959-63), though he also appeared in "Wagon Train" and "Tales of Wells Fargo".

No further information currently available. Holmes was 9 at the start of the series. His films included "OPERATION PACIFIC" (51), "KEY WITNESS" (60) and "THE MIRACLE OF SANTA'S WHITE REINDEER" (63). Bobby Crawford was the unsung elder brother of Johnny Crawford, who became a household face playing Chuck Connors' son Mark in "The Rifleman" (1957-59). Bobby had a central role earlier in the "Playhouse 90" production "A Child of Our Time".
